What is it?

A thrilling team challenge of musical knowledge.

If you have the know-how about neo-punk-rock, the data on dance or the particulars surrounding pop, Don't Mind the Buzz! is the game show to test your musical minds!

Bash those buzzers to ensure victory!

How does it work?

The group is divided into teams and given an assortment of electronic buzzers to answer the questions fired at them.

Our suave-yet-sarcastic 1960's style host will explain the format of the game show, keep score and introduce the different rounds.

Your game show can consist of any number of rounds, and we can also concoct bespoke challenges. The typical rounds are:

Album Covers

Teams name the artist and album title from a range of album cover images.

Lost for Words

Part of a song with indistinct lyrics is played to each team. Teams do their best to decipher the words before they sing back their answers alongside the music. Failing to interpret the lyrics, they can simply invent something to fit the song!

Name the Pop Star

Wigs ahoy! Each team dresses as famous pop stars or groups while the rest of the teams try to guess their identity.

Singing in the Club Style

Our host will perform a song in the notorious 'club style'. Can the teams make out which song he is singing?

Never Mind the Instruments

Without instruments or words, teams attempt a rendition of a particular song. The other teams have to guess what the song is – but depending on the mimers' skills, that's easier said than done!

Quick Fire Round

General music knowledge questions fired at teams, quickly...

What's My Line?

Teams guess the next line of a selection of tunes, trying to get as many right answers as possible before the clock times out.

After all the rounds have been completed, the host adds up the final scores and announces the winning team; crowned masters of musical knowledge!
